

The continued cooperation between the Law School, the Industrial Relations Research Institute, the Business School, the School of Social Work and the School of Engineering, as well as the general tradition of the interaction between law and social sciences at U.W.-Madison, provide the kind of supportive environment that has enabled our programs to survive and grow despite limited resources.

Currently, Professors James E. Jones, Jr. and June Weisberger are the faculty members primarily involved in the labor law program. However, Professor Arlen Christenson maintains an active interest. His teaching of Local Government Law includes substantial portions directed to public sector collective bargaining, and periodically he teaches a course devoted specifically to public sector labor law.

LAW SCHOOL IN THE OLYMPICS

Alison Carlson a University of Wisconsin Law Student will be one of 52 persons elected from a field of 6,000 who will carry the Olympic Torch to the 1980 Olympic games at Lake Placid, New York. She will represent the State of Wisconsin. Ms. Carlson was selected on the basis of personality, academics, outside activities, and her essay on the "Greek Ideal of the Whole Man". Ms. Carlson rowed with the Princeton Women's Crew as an undergrad, runs regularly, and is President of the Mendota Rowing Club. In addition to running an 18 to 30 mile leg of the relay she will also participate in opening ceremonies.

While the Olympic Committee is paying for the direct costs of the torch relay, it is the individual's responsibility to pay all other expenses including travel, food and lodging. Ms. Carlson is hoping to raise at least part of the estimated $3,000 cost of her participation by appearances at various group meetings. She will also accept contributions made to her (2546 Kendall Avenue, Madison, WI 53705).
