

University of Wisconsin Law School 1988 Annual Fund Report

*David G. Utley, Vice President
University of Wisconsin Foundation*

Voluntary support, long a major factor in enabling leading private law schools to achieve a measure of excellence, has in recent years become increasingly important to the strengthening of legal education at the University of Wisconsin. While public funding of the Law School is generous for a state of Wisconsin's size and wealth, it will not, by itself, enable the School to reach the level of excellence in teaching, scholarship and public service that the state and the legal profession deserve. For the Law School to achieve such standards, additional sources of support are required; to provide financial assistance to deserving students, to support clinical programs and the hard pressed library, to enable faculty to undertake programs of research and public service, and for many other purposes. And to what more natural or appropriate source of support can the Law School turn than its own alumni, those who have benefited most from a Wisconsin legal education?

Happily, law alumni have in recent years responded with increasing generosity to the needs and opportunities facing their School. A successful endowment-raising effort in the mid-1980s raised nearly $7,000,000 for the support of scholarships, endowed professorships and other programs. Since then, attention has been devoted to increasing the annual fund, a less glamorous form of fund-raising than a "campaign" but one equally vital to the School's health. Here too progress has been significant as the percentage of law alumni contributing to the School has grown from about 10% at the beginning of the decade to 26% in 1988.

Alumni giving to the Law School in 1988 showed mildly encouraging results. During the year ending December 31, 2,145 donors contributed a total of $699,907 in support of the School's education, research and public service programs. This compares with 2,200 donors who contributed $838,806 during the previous year. While one never likes to see a decline in the total level of voluntary support, it should be noted that the 1987 total was made possible by a generous bequest of $400,000 received that year. During 1988, the largest single gift received, again a bequest, was for just under $130,000. If one adjusts for these two bequests, alumni giving showed a significant increase last year.

The apparent modest decline in the number of donors, from 2,200 to 2,145, is attributable to a policy, introduced in 1988, of counting only those year-end gifts actually in hand on December 31, rather than those postmarked in December but received in January. As a result of this policy, 141 donors whose checks were in the mail on New Year's Eve (honest!) were not counted in 1988, but will instead be included in the 1989 totals. Had they been included last year, the number of alumni contributors would have risen by 4%.

Several very generous gifts received during the past year deserve special mention. Notable among these were a bequest of $127,840 from the estate of Mrs. Maud Smalley of Racine, who established a scholarship fund in memory of her late husband, Gwynette Smalley (LL.B. '22); a gift of $50,000 from Bruce Thomas (LL.B. '51) of Paradise Valley, Arizona, who has established a fund for the teaching of ethics in law; and Mr. and Mrs. Samuel M. Soref (LL.B. '26) of Fort Lauderdale, Florida, whose contribution of $50,000 in 1988 was the first payment on a $150,000 pledge, $130,000 of which will establish an unrestricted endowment in the Law School. And, finally, special recognition is due Joseph Fishelson (LL.B. '36) of Shreve, Ohio, whose exceptional support of the Law School in recent years was attested to once again by his additional generous gift of $25,000 in 1988.

To these friends, and to the more than 2,000 other law alumni who have demonstrated their concern for the Law School by contributing to its programs, we at the Law School and the University of Wisconsin Foundation express our deep appreciation.
